A JULY EVENT—Near the Circus Maximus in Rome July 18, 64, the appalling crackle of flames attracted the attention of residents. Trumpets sounded the warning, but winds whipped the fire into an inferno that spread across the Rome, unrestrained for a week. Thousands of citizens died, and hundreds of thousands became homeless. Rumors circulated that the fire had been started by the emperor himself—26-year-old Nero. The arson rumors began because Nero had been wanting to demolish and rebuild large portions of Rome, planning to rename the city for himself. It is believed to divert blame, Nero pointed a finger of blame at Christians. It was recorded that the followers of Christ “were put to death with exquisite cruelty, and to their sufferings Nero added mockery and derision. Some were covered with skins of wild beasts, left to be devoured by dogs; others were nailed to crosses; numbers of them were burned alive; many, covered with inflammable matter, were set on fire to serve as torches during the night.” Both Peter and Paul, according to tradition, were among the martyrs. But within a short time of the death of the Roman Emperor the church in Rome was stronger than ever, and St. Peter’s Cathedral stands today on the very spot where so many Christians harshly suffered in Rome.
