THE APOSTLE'S CREED

The Apostle's Creed is a brief statement of Christian belief, traditionally attributed to the early Apostles. It contains three important confessions; one for each person of the Godhead.

'I believe in God Almighty '
'I believe in Jesus Christ'
'I believe in The Holy Spirit'.

These three assertions were addressed to candidates for baptism in the early church. Today it is widely agreed that The Apostle's Creed was indeed developed as the baptismal confession of faith. It is known as The Rules of Christian Faith, and continues to be used today for the same reason in the Christian Church and believing things that are true.

Each clause of The Apostle's Creed is traced to many New Testament references and The Creed itself originated very early, to provide main points of the belief of Christianity so that it was acknowledged as separate from Judaism and pagan religions.

The Apostle's Creed helps people understand the Truth of Christianity and strengthens their belief. People do trust in God, but many have different and definite ideas of the basic Christian doctrine. The Creed is for correct doctrine. The Words of The Creed are found within the New Testament writings and is a safeguard against error. Anyone who sincerely believes this declaration is a child in the Kingdom of God. The Creed states of the Lordship of Christ.
